The 12th International Symposium on Science, Theology and Art (ISSTA-2013)

‘Religion and Politics’

Church-State Relationship: from Constantine the Great to post-Maastricht Europe

Alba Iulia, 14 - 16 May 2013, Romania

Argument:

In a world which seeks unity and cohesion through thought and meaning, in strategies and actions, we firmly believe that interdisciplinary research can bring added knowledge. This is the reason why the symposium intends to interrelate specialists in sciences, theology and art, so that their research can contribute to a better understanding of life and society, of humanity and its depths.

General information:

Located in the heart of Transylvania, midway between Cluj-Napoca and Sibiu – two important cultural and economic centres of Transylvania – Alba Iulia has won the privilege of being “the soul capital of the Romanians”, place and seal of a historical moment consecrating the union of The Romanian Principalities - Moldavia, Wallachia and Transylvania – into a single state: Romania.

An ancient Roman town and the medieval capital of the Transylvanian Principality, Alba Iulia is also a historical centre of Romanian culture and spirituality that produced some of the first books printed in Romanian language (The New Testament - 1648) and which also hosts one of the most famous codices in the world – Codex Aureus (11th century), preserved along with others manuscripts and rare incunabula in the Batthyaneum Library.

Looking for places and facts to enrich their minds and souls, the tireless researchers will not refuse the pleasure to meet history at home in Alba Iulia. The whole city is an open air museum inviting you to a simultaneous excursion to a Roman fortress and a medieval burg, and the three fortifications, recently restored by the municipality, will provide lasting memories in a setting where nothing is missing in order to make one feel a witness of the past.

We come together to debate on:
